MS in Applied Statistics | Statistics Degrees at Loyola

Equipped with statistical modelling tools, evidence and big data, applied statisticians with statistics degrees from Loyola influence and drive the decision-making and analytics process at a vast array of organizations.

Applied statisticians, biostatisticians, and data analysts are in high demand, both in the Chicago area and nationwide. Currently, more jobs are available for qualified individuals. With only a small number of qualified candidates in the Chicago area, graduates of Loyola's Master of Science (MS) in Applied Statistics program enjoy a wide array of career options.

The MS in Applied Statistics puts students ahead of the game.

The MS in Applied Statistics is ideal for recent graduates looking to make a career change and/or predictive modelling. While some of our students come from quantitative backgrounds, many students come from programs in biological sciences, psychology, business, and education, as well as for working professionals who are looking to start a new career. Individuals from a variety of areas have done well in our program and are now gainfully employed applied statisticians and data scientists.
